Rangers vs. Pre-Season Poll

In the face of a pre-season consensus of experts which put the Rangers in sixth place in the National Hockey League for this 1960-61 season, Muzz Patrick got up at the first luncheon of New York's order of the blue line and said:

"I'm sorry the General is no longer with us. I think he'd have gotten a lot of satisfaction out of this team. We're going to make the playoffs. And I say it without reservation, regardless of injuries."

Gen. John Reed Kilpatrick, in a distinguished career in sports, in the military, in business, was the Ranger's president and No. 1 rooter, as well. He wanted so much to see the Stanley Cup perched in his office in Madison Square Garden.

But he is gone, to his final resting place, and so too is Lester Patrick, who managed and coached the Rangers from their first year of 1926 through a long stretch of exciting, successful years.

And also no longer with us is Jim Burchard, who covered the Rangers for the N. Y. World Telegram and Sun from 1927-28 until he retired at the end of last season. Jim passed away in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

These are our losses, and it was after a moment of silence in memory of these fine stalwarts that Muzz Patrick, who holds the position of vice-president and general manager that was his father's, Lester, got up and promised to lift the Rangers to their old eminence in the hockey world.

The season of 1959-60 was the most trying since Muzz took over the front office reins. The Rangers got off to a terrible start, disrupted by injuries to key personnel, and after rallying briefly before Christmas, slumped off again.

When in the final weeks the Rangers put on a burst of better than .500 hockey, it was too late to change the final summation. But Capt. Red Sullivan observed: "Even if it seems unimportant, it's nice to have the memory of an improved finish. It usually carries over."

In the summer draft meetings, the Rangers put in claims for three players at $20,000 each—defenseman Jim Morrison, who had been at Detroit the year before; defenseman Don Johns of Winnipeg and center Ted Hampson of Toronto.

All three started the season as regulars, and Coach Alf Pike counted them as three good reasons why the Rangers would be a sounder, better balanced club.

Pike also looked for Dave Balon, a rookie from the Three Rivers, Que., club to put extra sock and zest up front.

"It's quite a jump from Three Rivers to the NHL," Pike said, "and in Balon's case, it's tougher still because we're making a winger out of a center. But he's strong and he can play hockey."

The same goes for center Earl Ingarfield, who comes up from Cleveland of the AHL after spending more than a year of enforced idleness on the Ranger bench. Earl hit for 25 goals in 40 games at Cleveland. He is as ready now as he'll ever be.

Beyond that, and the secondary protection in goal afforded by Jack McCartan, Pike looked for sharp improvement among so many of the veterans who for assorted reasons slumped off in 1959-60.

This is a milestone year of a sort, the 35th in the history of the club, and it has a new president in Adm. John J. Bergen and many new fans who, through wider exposure and swifter travel, are just discovering the dramatic facets and emotional experience of a hockey game, big league style.

Admiral Bergen put it his own way when he addressed the hockey writers at that first luncheon:

"I'm rather a novice as a hockey witness. But I can understand now why the game had such a grip on the General and on fans everywhere. I want to know more about it from every angle. And I'm sure I will."

Alf Pike Makes a Fresh Start

This is, for Alf Pike, a chance to put together a big league hockey club from scratch and restore it to full working order.

He is starting his first full year as an NHL coach. He knows his players. He knows the league. And everybody on the team and in the league knows him, too.

He was not a great hockey player, but he was a good one and a most versatile one. He has known the thrill of being with a Stanley Cup winner, and also with a team that finished the regular race in first place.

He assembled and coached one of the greatest clubs in the history of junior hockey and he also coached championship clubs in the Western Hockey League.

Players who have worked for him know him to be fair-minded and understanding but never completely satisfied. He coaches always with a view that stresses the best interests of the club. He played the same way.

Pike was a product of the Rangers' training school in Winnipeg, his home town, inaugurated in the late thirties by Lester Patrick. He had been a star forward for the Winnipeg Monarchs in junior hockey, and he saw New York for the first time as a member of the Rovers of the Eastern Amateur Hockey League in 1938-39.

At the tail end of that season he played for the Philadelphia Ramblers and the following year he joined the Rangers. That was 1939-40 and it was a great season for New York. The team won the Stanley Cup.

"I'll never forget that year," Alf says. "In the opener of the Cup finals against Toronto, I accidentally kicked in Toronto's tying goal, then scored the winner in 15:30 of sudden death."

Alf Pike

Injuries and war-time service cut short his career, and he went to Guelph, Ont., to coach a great team to the Memorial Cup, emblematic of junior hockey supremacy.

On that team were such big leaguers as Andy Bathgate, Dean Prentice, Lou Fontinato, Harry Howell, Ron Murphy, and Ron Stewart. Later he switched to Winnipeg and again met with much acclaim as a developer of young talent.

Alf and his pretty wife, Angie, have six children, including one married daughter, and they've made New York their year-round home.

Dave Balon, which he pronounces like Malone, is a rugged, blond forward who comes of a hockey-playing family. He has an older brother, Rudy, who plays senior hockey, and two younger ones, Chick and Nick. Chick was at the Ranger camp with Dave, a look-see based on the fact that, playing for Prince Albert in his last year of junior hockey, he broke a league mark for most points. Nick is just 16, still has three years of junior hockey. They're all centers or left wingers. Dave plays both positions. He's had two years as a pro, with 28 goals in 61 games last season at Three Rivers, Que., of the Eastern Pro League. That topped his team. Dave's a digger with a lot of determination. He took 104 minutes in penalties last year. An old Ranger scout, Johnny Walker, collared Dave off the natural lakes of Wakaw, Sask., and directed him 30 miles north to Prince Albert. Rangers called him up with linemate Mel Pearson in late January last year, but he got on only briefly for three games. That was his first look at New York, and suddenly he felt a long way from Wakaw. Dave's married to the former Gwen Gillies.

Andy Bathgate's artistry as a shot-maker, play-maker and deceptive skater in six full years with the Rangers has already broken two all-time club records. He now has the most points, also the most assists. Both records belonged to Frank Boucher, one of the brilliant originals in Blue Shirts. Before he's done, Bathgate should bust the goal-scoring club record, too. He has 164. Only Bill Cook with 228 and Bryan Hextall with 187 were able to produce more than that as Rangers. And Bathgate, despite the chronic handicap of aching knees, is a man in his athletic prime of life, at 28. One more statistical achievement for the remarkable Bathgate, the league's MVP two years ago and its all-star right winger: That same year he ripped in 40 goals, also a club record. Andy followed his older brother, Frank, into the Rangers' organization, and whereas Frank was regarded as the can't-miss prospect, it was Andy whose talents really flowered on NHL ice rinks. Andy won two major Western golf tournaments in British Columbia last summer, applies his links' training to hockey shot-making, and vice versa. He's married to the former Merle Lewis.

Brian Cullen is a clever, hustling center with leadership qualities on ice and a desire to prove same. He didn't get much chance last year, his first as a Ranger. They had drafted him in the summer, but he warmed the bench and made infrequent appearances. In such circumstances he wasn't in the best of shape when he did play. But at the season's close he got to center for Dean Prentice and Andy Bathgate in the last eight games and, as a unit, they racked up thirteen goals and really put on a brilliant passing show. It was the plan in training to restore this trio to action as a line, but Prentice's injury sidetracked that stratagem at least temporarily. Brian, a scoring star in junior hockey, also hit for 20 goals as a Maple Leaf three years ago. In Toronto he was part of a brother act with Barry. Now Barry's in Buffalo, a Chicago farm. Brian doesn't smoke, drink or cuss, but works in public relations for a brewery in the off-season in St. Catherine's, Ont. He's married, has three girls and a boy.

Lou Fontinato's 137 minutes in the penalty box last season, in a rather tame and disappointing year for the "cop on the beat," brought his total of penalty minutes to an all-time Ranger high. The legendary Ching Johnson, whose colorful exploits did so much to give hockey a foothold in New York, had the old club record. Louie says: "Forget last year. Everything went wrong." He started out with a bad knee, then a sprained wrist and sundry ailments that cramped his style. He's in much better shape now, eager for the old rough-and-tumble, though not unmindful of the $100 fine slapped on him, along with Toronto's Frank Mahovlich, in the wake of a high-sticking duel in the season's first exhibition. Fontinato can be rough, but he can also defend and block shots and make the smart moves of a veteran backliner. His old friends know him as "Leapin Lou" for his impulsive jumps when they point the finger at him. He's married to the former Marie Clancy and they have a baby daughter. Home is Guelph, Ont.

Bill Gadsby's service in the NHL, split between the Black Hawks and Rangers, covers 14 years. This is No. 15. That puts Bill right up there with Gordie Howe as the league's senior member, based on time in the league. It has been a most distinguished career, too, for this slick defenseman who until last year was elected to the all-stars' first or second team four straight Ranger seasons. Two years ago, in fact, Bill collected assists at a record rate for an NHL backliner. Like so many other Rangers, things just didn't break right for Gadsby last year, starting with torn rib muscles in the very first exhibition. Bill had a much better training camp this season; so much so, he ventured to suggest he might stick around five more years on the big top. And then, as an added thought: "But I sure wish I had that young Spencer's legs." Bill was traded late last season to Detroit in a deal that was cancelled as quickly as it was made. It didn't disturb the Old Pro. He played it to the hilt right down to the wire. He's married to Edna; they have four daughters. They spend the off-season in Edmonton where Gadsby owns a golf driving range.

Ted Hampson, nee Edward George Hampson, first saw the light of day in Togo, Sask., but got in his junior hockey in a big town, Flin Flon, Man. It's bigger, at least, by comparison. Played there under an old Ranger, Bobby Kirk, who led the boys to a rare Memorial Cup for the Westerners. Ted came to two Ranger camps, starred for pro clubs like Providence and Vancouver, but never got a chance with the big team. Last fall the Leafs claimed him on waivers. He was a regular center in the early weeks, then lost out to Larry Regan. In late January, Ted was farmed out to Rochester and convinced an ex-Ranger, Steve Kraftcheck, who was his coach, that he was big league material. "He'll play any place and he's a good team man," Steve said. "I played him at left wing with Dave Creighton and Dick Van Impe in the playoffs. He showed me he can check and skate and shoot." Ted spends summers in Flin Flon (the winters regularly dip to 40 below) with wife Gail and two sons.

Andy Hebenton, a quiet man, has put in five straight years of 70-game hockey for the Rangers, or ever since Muzz Patrick rescued him from a life in the minors. It was Muzz's first deal and his best investment, a $10,000 purchase from Victoria. Andy started out as a 20-goal scorer, went over 30 two years ago, then slumped to 19 last year. He plays it clean, but nobody pushes him around either. Winner of the Lady Byng in 1957-58, Andy missed repeating by half a point the next year. The front office was so upset by this miscarriage of justice, he was given the $1,000 bonus by the club. He's called "Spud" by his mates because it takes a rare kind of self-discipline to keep him away from the spuds. But this year he reported hard as nails, determined to get away to a good start. Andy was originally a member of the Canadiens' farm system, then dismissed as unlikely for big league status because of a labored skating technique. Patrick appreciated his talents when they were both in the Western League and bought his contract. He's married, with three children, and spends the off-season in Victoria, B. C.

Camille Henry came into the NHL without a robust physique or natural skating speed, but he knows how to handle a puck, how to set up a play and how to finish one. Injuries set him back last year for the first time since he came into the league—first, a damaged knee, then a broken bone in his left forearm as he hurtled into a goal post. He had made a sound recovery from these injuries when the team came into its final exhibition game this fall, then suffered a hairline fracture of a lower rib in Providence. Nonetheless, he is looking forward to recapturing his reputation as Camille the Eel who was (a) rookie of the year in 1953-54 direct from junior hockey in Quebec City and (b) a 32-goal scorer in 1957-58 when he made the second all-stars and won the Lady Byng Trophy. Once scored four goals in a game against Terry Sawchuk, only time it ever happened to the Red Wing goalie. In his youth, Camille had designed on being a pro baseball player. Then the Rangers signed him. He makes his off-season home in Quebec City with his chanteuse wife, Aimee.

Harry Howell is one of those defensemen who does a thoroughly professional job without catching the eye of the average spectator. But his own coach, Alf Pike, has called him one of the soundest backliners in the league. He seldom gets trapped or drawn out of position. He doesn't often give the puck away, either. Harry goes into his ninth year; except for one game with Cincinnati when it was in the AHL, he has no pro minor experience. With 546 games under his belt on the big top, he goes into this campaign with the knowledge that only Ott Heller played more games in the uniform of the Rangers. Ott stayed through 647. Harry had one brief spell as captain of the team, voluntarily laid aside these duties to concentrate on his own game. With seven goals last year, he equaled his own high in the NHL. Pike considers him a good point man on the power play, and he may see considerable service as such. Harry's kid brother, Ron, is considered a leading football player in Canada. Harry lives in his native Hamilton, Ont., in the off-season with his wife and two daughters.

Earl Ingarfield put in a year and a half on the Rangers' bench when he sought out Muzz Patrick. "Boss, I can't prove anything here. Send me out." This was early December. Muzz agreed. Earl was finally placed in Cleveland and he tore the league apart. Playing between a couple of vets, Ed Mazur and Fred Glover, he scored 25 goals and 40 assists in 40 games, earning a real chance on the big top. Jim Hendy called him "the best center Cleveland ever had." He could not only score but he could work hard in his own end. Ingarfield had played for Pike in Winnipeg before he ever saw New York. That was in 1957-58. It resulted in his promotion to the Rangers, but didn't get him a ticket for action. Now he's got it. In the off-season Earl's a ball player back in Lethbridge, Alta., in a semi-pro circuit that has brought fairly sizable bonuses to young prospects. Plays the outfield. Earl is well-built at 5-11 and 185 and Pike says he thrives on work. He's married, has a son.

Don Johns, a blond crew-cut who set out to make his way as a defenseman six years ago at 16, came to the Rangers last June in the inter-league draft. New York claimed him from Winnipeg for $20,000. Johns made a fine impression in training camp and survived the pre-season cuts. But while he was new to New York, he wasn't new to the coach, Alf Pike, who had had him for one full year and part of the most recent one, until Alf himself was called up. Pike's recommendation obviously carried weight. Johns started out in the Canadiens' system, playing in a Montreal Met league at 17, with Ottawa at 18 and Ft. William, Ont., where he won the Jack Humphreys Trophy—donated by the Rangers' chief scout—as best defenseman in the Thunder Bay Jr. A League at 19. Then came two years with Winnipeg of the Western League. Don got a game-winning goal in the Rangers' first exhibition against Toronto, suffered a broken nose in a practice session at Ottawa, and opened the regular campaign wearing a combination nose-head guard to protect the schnozz. Don was born in St. George, Ont., 50 miles outside Toronto, lives now with his wife Carol and baby Michael in Montreal.

Jim Morrison has touched all the bases, so to speak, starting out as an amateur prospect in the Montreal farm system and belonging, though not playing, for every other team in the NHL before the Rangers claimed him in the draft last summer. Two years ago he helped lift Boston to the playoffs. They traded him for Nick Mickoski to Detroit, and he got the Wings in there last year. Then, the day before the draft, this swift-skating defenseman was swapped for Howie Glover to Chicago. The Hawks did not protect him, however, and so in a space of 14 hours he went from Detroit to Chicago to New York. In Jim's view, he is just reaching his peak. "These last two years were my best," he says. Jim's hair is thinning but he has just turned 29. Pike believes Jim's experience will help the Rangers break out of their own zone more precisely. Last year Jim teamed up with Red Kelly. Spends the off-season working in a pro golf shop outside Toronto. Married, has two boys.

Dean Prentice has been described as a guy with all the hockey tools for stardom. Last year he put them on display. It was his eighth year as a Ranger, after making the jump from junior hockey in Guelph, Ont., and easily his finest. He scored 32 goals. This equaled a club record for left wingers, made first by Lynn Patrick, then by Camille Henry. Prentice was picked to the second all-star team, good for a $500 bonus. He was voted the club MVP award, also the fan club trophy as the team's most popular player. Almost unnoticed, however, was a hushed-up right knee injury which led ultimately to surgery to correct a torn cartilege. It caused him to miss the entire training period. What brought on Dean's sharp improvement as a goal-getter? Perhaps it was Coach Alf Pike's insistence that he shoot more often. Andy Bathgate's fine playmaking doubtless contributed, too. Dean is one of the few players around today with a four-goal game; did it two years ago. Originally from northern Ontario in Schumacher, Dean now makes his home in Guelph. He's married, has two daughters.

Leon Rochefort, long, lean and gaunt-faced, is a right wing rookie of considerable promise. He has real speed, a good snap shot and a hustling disposition. Unheralded going into camp, with just one year of pro experience behind him, this taciturn 21-year-old of Gallic extraction made a favorable impression on players and coach alike and was carried as fourth right wing until farmed out to Kitchener, Ont. Capt. Red Sullivan, who teamed up with him in camp, tabbed him "can't-miss." Gump Worsley greeted him as "Cheesey," from the brand that sounds somewhat like his name, and it stuck. Leon comes from Cap de la Madeleine, Que., the same town that produced Montreal's Jean-Guy Talbot. It is across the bridge from Three Rivers, which is where Leon played Junior B hockey before moving away from the French-speaking precinct to take up the game in Guelph, Ont., for two years. There was nothing in his record there, only 14 goals his last season, to suggest he could make it in the pros, but he bagged 27 goals, third best on the club, as a rookie. Leon played mostly on a line with Dave Balon at center and Mel Pearson at left wing.

Len Ronson may be the first player to jump out of the International Hockey League, which comes under the heading of senior amateur classification, to the NHL. And whether or not he makes it stick, the chunky left winger got his thrill of a lifetime by deflecting a long shot from in close for the game-winning goal in the Rangers' opener. Len got his chance in training camp because of injuries, compounded by a holdout situation. He made a good impression. Coach Alf Pike calls him a guy you don't particularly notice until he gets off that good shot. At Ft. Wayne, Ind., last year he set a new goals-scoring record with 62. In Junior A, he played at Galt and St. Catherines and was therefore in the Detroit and Chicago farm systems. He wears a tattoo on his left bicep which reads: "To Mom and to Dad." All of Ft. Wayne, it seems, sent congratulatory telegrams the day after he won a big league game, but Pike wasn't surprised: "He generally is in the right place at the right time." Ken Ullyot, Ft. Wayne G. M., recommended him to Muzz Patrick three years ago. Len's home town of Brantford, Ont., is where ex-defense star Leo Reise resides. Ronson's married, has two daughters.

(No pro record)

Ken Schinkel put in six long years in the minors before a 43-goal season at Springfield and a chance tie-up with the Rangers led to his first big league opportunity. That was last year and Ken seemed on his way to a thumping rookie campaign, with six goals in his first 20 games. But he took a jarring shoulder injury around Christmas, when somebody put him into the boards, and his shot-making skills were considerably reduced the rest of the way. Ken learned something else: You can't afford the luxury of an extra split-second in the NHL. You make your play in a hurry or you don't make it at all. That's Ken's opinion. He finished with thirteen goals—unlucky thirteen, he said—with only one over the last two months. He spent the summer back home at a golf mecca called Fonthill, Ont., working on a steel construction job and toughening up by doing push-ups between jobs. Ken didn't start skating until he was 12, didn't play organized hockey until 14. He grew up in western Canada. Married, has a son.

Eddie Shack, a serious-minded young man in training, developed into a stubborn holdout, leaving the club in the midst of the exhibition schedule at Sudbury, Ont., his home. It wasn't until the season was two games old that the rugged, colorful forward agreed to terms. Despite the holdout, Ranger coach Alf Pike optimistically believed Shack would improve on his first two years in New York, during which he scored seven, then eight goals. Before turning pro, Shack was a Junior A star at the parent club's Guelph, Ont., farm, and it was freely predicted that he would make it big in the NHL. He was sent to Providence of the AHL in his first pro year and scored 16 goals in 35 games before a leg fracture sidelined him for the balance of the season. Near the end of the 1959-60 season, Shack was actually traded to Detroit with Bill Gadsby for two Red Wings, but a day later the deal was cancelled and Muzz Patrick philosophized: "Maybe the best deals are the ones that don't pan out." Eddie is a powerful skater, owns a hard shot, seems to have unlimited endurance. He's single.

George (Red) Sullivan has had four years as a Ranger behind him, three as team captain. He grew up wanting to be a Bruin. As it happened, he signed his first pro contract with Boston. But then came a disillusioning transfer to Chicago. And after leading the Hawks in scoring for two years, a trade that brought him to New York for Wally Hergesheimer. Red is this kind of player, as described by trainer Frank Paice: "He has less beef than almost anybody else in the league, but his underclothes have more sweat than anybody else's at the game's end." Two years ago Sully topped 20 goals for the first time in his NHL career, but he slumped off last season and found himself fighting for a job in camp. Which was okay with the red head. He never ran short of fight. Sullivan made the assist to Andy Hebenton in this year's all-star game that broke a 1-1 tie and led to the Canadiens' defeat. Red and Marion Sullivan have a son, two daughters.

Irv Spencer divided his first year in the Ranger organization down the middle—playing half his games in the NHL, the other half with Three Rivers, Que., and Springfield, Mass. A driving defenseman with enough spirit to offset occasional mistakes, he was considered one of the better prospects in the Montreal system until the Rangers claimed him in the draft a year ago last summer. Got his junior hockey training in Kitchener-Waterloo, Ont., and Peterborough, Ont., so it was no surprise that he received highly vocal encouragement in both those towns when the Rangers played exhibition games there last September. His coaches in those towns were Black Jack Stewart and Ted Kennedy, two of the finest players ever to lace on boots. He also had a full year with Floyd (Busher) Curry and the Montreal Royals of the Quebec League before the Rangers picked him off. Nobody was blessed with a more robust physique than this 5-10 180-pounder. Spencer remembers his first year in organized hockey well. He was a goalie at 10. He suffered a freakish jaw fracture in an early season workout in Chicago. Home is Sudbury, Ont. He's single.

Lorne (Gump) Worsley is in point of service the second oldest goalie in the NHL. He is in his eighth year with the Rangers, winner of the Calder award as Rookie of the year in 1952-53. Cool, happy-go-lucky, the Gumper owns a brilliant glove hand and a facile big stick. Injuries contributed to his poor campaign in 1959-60, a year wherein he started out with a sprained left ankle and ended it in mid-February with severed tendons on his right hand. For the first time he was unable to achieve at least one shutout. Worsley is a product of the Rangers' farm system, coming off the Montreal sandlots to join the New York Rovers. After his fine freshman year with the Rangers, Worsley was sent to Vancouver where he won MVP honors in the Western League. The colorful crewcut has since become one of New York's most popular goalies in history. In the off-season, he also has gained recognition as one of Canada's leading soccer players. The Gumper is married, has two boys.

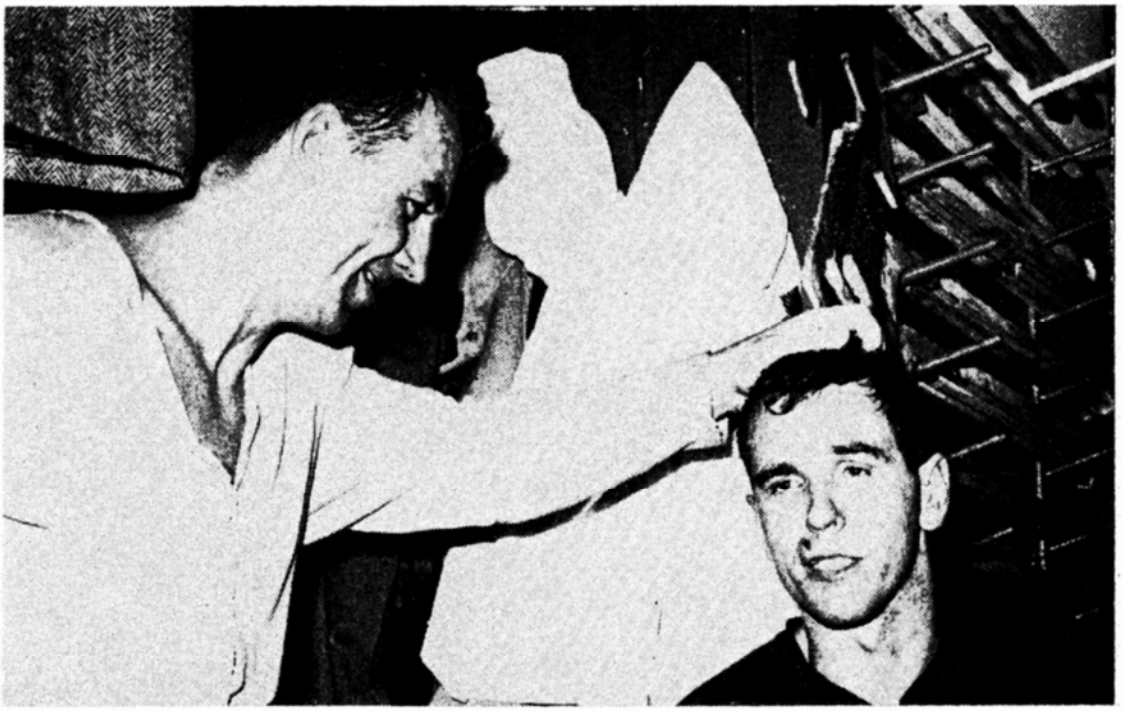
Jack McCartan, U. S. Olympic hero in goal, stands firm as Chicago's NHL scoring leader, Bobby Hull, swoops in. Andy Hebenton checks Hull and Bill Gadsby lends a stick. McCartan made story-book debut in NHL race.

CONGRATULATING A WINNER



Jack McCartan gets a pat on the head from Andy Hebenton after winning first NHL game against Red Wings by 3-1. Also won his first of 1960-61.

The startling rise of Jack McCartan to the Rangers, via his Olympic success for the victorious Americans at Squaw Valley, Calif., would have most youngsters looking at press clippings all day.

But Jack is no dreamer. Despite the fact he provided hockey with its most exciting story of the year, Jack takes a hard look at the game and his future in it.

"When you're a professional," he says, "where they pay off on what you can do today, it is suicide to live in the past."

Jack was in the Army, a graduate of the University of Minnesota, when he was invited to play for the U. S. Nationals the winter before last. Then came last season's Olympic games. In a storybook finish, after being virtually rejected from the squad, he put the U. S. team on top over Canada and Russia.

The Rangers had put McCartan on their negotiation list before the Olympics on ex-Ranger Bob Dill's recommendation. Then after the enormous popularity of the international games, they called him in for a try-out in NHL competition.

He played four games, winning from Detroit by 3-1, tying Chicago and Toronto by 1-1 and 2-2, and losing the last one to Boston, 3-2.

In training camp at Kitchener, Ont., this fall, McCartan played the first two exhibitions against Toronto and won both.

There were times when Jack seemed awkward, overly anxious. But he was never beaten, and instead of gloating over success, he played the games over and over in his mind, and concentrated on eliminating his flaws in technique.

Big, rangy, a third baseman as a ball player, this St. Paul boy went to college with baseball on his mind, played hockey just to fill in the winter months. He's the only American in the NHL, though there were other American goalies in past years, such as Frank Brimsek, Mike Karakas and Sam LoPresti.

"On ice, he's a holler guy," says Coach Alf Pike.

McCartan lives in St. Paul in the summer months. He's married to the former Barbara Bingham and they have a baby boy.

DEAN PRENTICE WINS WEST SIDE MVP HONORS

That's Deano flanked by Red Sullivan and Andy Hebenton after winning the cup. Red and Andy split the Players Player Award.

After putting together three straight years as the Rangers' MVP, Andy Bathgate stepped aside (involuntarily, we hasten to add) in favor of a guy he grew up with in hockey, Dean Prentice.

Prentice broke the Bathgate streak with his finest year in the game. He bagged 32 goals. More than that, he never let up the chase for left-wing honors in the league, and it took an extraordinary year by Chicago's Bobby Hull to beat him out.

In any case, the sterling silver Revere bowl which is tendered annually by the West Side Association of Commerce (with Harold W. McGraw and James W. Danahy making their annual pilgrimage to center ice for the ceremony) went to Prentice, along with a savings bond.

Two years ago, the West Siders also came up with a companion citation, which they called the Player's Player Award. This one went to Andy Hebenton virtually by acclamation of the players back in 1958-59.

It should be noted, parenthetically, that it is the only award which is won by a player by vote of the other members of the team. Everybody's eligible for it except the MVP, meaning in 1959-60 Prentice.

When the vote was taken, it was split this time between last year's winner, Hebenton, and Capt. Red Sullivan.

Prentice, incidentally, had his finest year despite a troublesome right knee. As he put it: "I must have banged it against a goal post four times during the season. And I guess the thing got worse with each rap."

This led to the removal the first week of training of a cartilege in the knee. He was sent to Mayo Clinic for surgery on the recommendation of Adm. John J. Bergen, president of the Rangers, who had had a similar operation done there some years ago.

On reporting back to the Rangers, Prentice said the knee felt "better than ever."

He said it would be unnecessary to put a special brace or guard of any kind around the injured knee. And he added: "If I don't have a good year again, I won't have any excuse."

Prentice is just the third left winger (see page 32) to win the West Side award since it was placed in competition in 1941-42.

QUIETING A BACK SEAT DRIVER

Squat Johnny Hanna takes Chicago's Stan Mikita for a bumpy ride as he drives in on Ranger territory. That's Ken Schinkel coming back and Referee Eddie Powers checking the play.
